

Thursday, April 1 2021

Dear, future self

Hey future me I am sending you this letter to talk about our modern day problems. Nowadays we are using more resources than the earth can give. We have so many cars not to mention the amount of people on the earth. I watched a video on what 2050 would be like and it said that we would have 2 billion cars and 9 billion people. I worry that we will run out of resources and space. My biggest worry is that we will mess up big time and push ourselves to the brink of extinction.

I think that if we do not stop this we will run out of everything. If we don't stop all this we could lose our animals because we are always destroying their environments. I worry about our impact on the earth with all the mining we do to get coal especially when we don't clean our mess. I also worry about the fact that currently the north pole is melting and that if it totally melts it will have big impacts on the water levels and if they rise they could destroy many landmarks and smaller countries in the shoreline.

I wonder if in the future we have found more ways to make more renewable resources. Did we win the race against time to save our planet? Also did we stop the polar ice caps from melting and save all those little countries by the shorelines? Two more things: did we stop pollution and save land and sea life? Last thing is how big are the advancements that we made in science and technologies and how did they help save the earth.

P.S. hope I'm a gamer

From Your Future Self Vitor